Eddie Little Crow (Lakota, Dakota) is a poet, former member of the American Indian Movement (AIM), and continues his work in traditional ways throughout the Northwest. As a member of the Elders Council and RED (Red Earth Descendents) in Southern Oregon, Little Crow works to keep a life in balance. He will be presenting work from a book about his life, Dreaming of a True World, A Opchine WaLa Ohkon, co-authored with antoinette nora claypoole. Talking about being Indian in a white world, the book/reading will include selections from his poetry, his history with AIM and his life lived as a Lakota--both on and off the reservation. Little Crow will talk about being Indian in a white world. His co-author, antoinette claypoole, explains: "It is best to think of him as a person coming to you to read poems, talk about surviving in these times---whether we are Indian or white. Ed has a lot to say about just staying alive, awake and present in these purification times."
